FRANKENSTEIN MIXED MEDIA ART

Frankenstein is an old, classic, scary story about a mad scientist who creates a monster by piecing together lots of strange body parts.

Inspired by this story, this 'mixed media' art activity will have you creating some super scary characters in time for Halloween.

This fun drawing project is perfect for just about any age human! You will find yourself creating a whole group of ghoulish characters with fantastic results. You can give your characters massive heads, long floppy arms, the more ridiculous, the more spooky the better. You can really go to town and continue to build your drawing skills.

- * Gather as many magazines as you have and cut out a number of different figures. We used a combination of magazines and children's comics.
- * Once you have cut out the individual figures, you will then need to cut them up! You need to remove all the limbs, cutting the legs, arms and heads off!
- * Now, before gluing anything down, you will have your individual body parts and need to move these around and keep switching them until you have found your perfect fit. Remember you will be replacing some of the pictures you have cut out with your own drawn version. In the example the minions head has been replaced with a spooky pumpkin head!
- * When adding the drawn limbs, bodies and heads it is best to do this on a separate piece of paper and again cut these out just like the magazine pictures.

What you will need: Old magazines and comics, scissors, glue, pencil, felt tip pens and paper.

- * Your drawings can be realistic and detailed or horrific and spooky—its up to you.
- * You are now ready to glue your 'Frankenstein' mixed media 'creature' down. Remember you can make a ghoulish gang, making as many as you want.
- * It is great just watching what children do with this activity. Read through the instructions together and then do whatever works best for you! Be as creative and scary as you want to be!
