This memory game has been played by generations and can be played inside or out. You can make it as easy or difficult as you want by changing the number of items.

Ask someone who is not playing the game to find up to 20 items from the garden or house and put them on a tray without the others seeing and place a cloth over them.

Ask that person to remove the cloth and those playing the game have 30 seconds to study the tray carefully. You cannot touch any of the items or write anything down. You have to try to remember all 20 objects.

One person covers the tray with a cloth and using a pencil and paper, write down all the things you can remember. An adult can help you.

You have five minutes to write down as many as you can remember.

The person who has remembered the most items correctly is the winner.

Parlour Games

When there wasn't the radio to listen to or a television to watch; when mobile phones and the PS4 hadn't been invented, people had to think of other games to play that the whole family or groups of children could take part in and didn't cost much.

These were known as Parlour Games and were played inside, usually in the living room or parlour as it was once called.
